

UL's Retail Certification Program (RCP)

UL's accredited supply chain certification service helps businesses mitigate risk and helps protect brand value, while providing confidence to retailers and consumers.

The Retail Certification Program (RCP) is an annual Good Manufacturing Practices (GMP) assessment intended to evaluate a facility used in your supply chain against current GMPs, as defined by the FDA's Code of Federal Regulations and current industry standard for the type of product you produce, purchase, or introduce into the Private and/or National Label Market.

Retailers and Vendors rely on UL's RCP audit reports and Certificate of Conformance.

Achieving Certification and a final report from UL's ACLASS accredited GMP program gives the retailer a greater level of confidence in the product and gives the vendor more credibility in selling product to a retailer.

Audit Fatigue is minimized through UL's RCP process, which is intended to meet multiple retailer requirements for annual third party audits and corrective action resolution within the supply chain.

Globally, UL is ACLASS Accredited by the ANSI-ASQ National Accreditation Board to provide Certification Marks in the following technical scopes:

- Over-The-Counter Drugs (OTC)
- Dietary Supplements
- Active Pharmaceutical Ingredients (API)/Excipients
- Dietary Ingredients
- Medical Devices
- Cosmetic/Personal Care Products
- Cosmetics ISO 22716
- Food
- Infant Formula
- General Consumer Products
